This and the other volumes in this series, have been laboriously transcribed from the photocopied originals to make it easier for students and historians to appreciate and use the voluminous materials therein. The Editor apologizes in advance for any errors of that process, but hope the reader will concede these are outweighed by the utility of the end product. We would like to thank Carr's Compendiums for its efforts to make the original documents available and hope that if they are still out there, they will reconnect with us. Though we have placed a copyright on the entire volume, the text is from a government source and is therefore in the public domain. All we request is that you don't copy or redistribute entire volumes in this series (and say nice things about us in your footnotes.)

Regarding the highlighting used in this series. Yellow designates words or phrases that are illegible in the original. Red points out redactions from the original text. [Where unredacted information has been found in unclassified sources, the redacted information has been replaced, but the highlighting is retained.] Green highlights information of general interest to the Editor, while Blue highlights information of interest to the Editor regarding his unit history interests.

Please feel free to offer corrections, comment or suggestions to the editor for inclusion in any future revision of this work. The Editor hopes you will find this information both of interest and useful.
